COMMON MISCONCEPTIONS

MYTH: Accounting is all about doing math.

TRUTH: Accounting relies far more on critical thinking, problem-solving, and attention to detail than on advanced math. Most tasks involve technology—like spreadsheets, analytics tools, and accounting software—rather than complex calculations.

MYTH: Accounting is only about taxes.

TRUTH: Taxes are just one small part of the field. Accountants work in auditing, payroll, cost analysis, budgeting, sustainability reporting, data analytics, fraud investigation, and more. Opportunities span nearly every industry.

MYTH: Accounting work is boring and repetitive.

TRUTH: Modern accounting incorporates automation, AI tools, and interactive software. Many roles involve collaborative problem solving, real-world analysis, and dynamic project-based work. It's more engaging—and more tech-driven—than ever.

MYTH: After you graduate, you're on your own.

TRUTH: Accounting is a highly networked profession. Instructors, employers, and professional associations frequently share job leads. Plus, certifications and specialized training (like payroll, QuickBooks, or analytics skills) help graduates stand out immediately.
